'7 Wonders of the World' is a term used for indicating the most representative tourist attractions in the World. As they are attracting so many tourists, countries possessing these cultural heritages are currently gaining a large amount of money. However, I believe that not only these but also other wonderful countries to travel there are in the world. In my personal preference, UAE would be the most preferable among them, due to its urbanization, artificial islands, and special deserts.

First of all, UAE is one of few places in the world where people can enjoy and feel the real city. A myriad of modern cities are dispersed all around the world, though, none of them consider about 'Skyscraper-diversity' like those such as Abudhabi, and Dubai. In other words, inconceivable amount of different buildings are existing in the cities. For instance, the world's highest skyscraper called 'Burj Khalifa', and the world's most luxurious and futuristic hotel called 'Burj Al Arab' can be witnessed in UAE. Furthermore, a majority of tourists head to Abudhabi or Dubai only in pursuit of visiting shopping malls.

Second of all, distinctive islands that can't be seen in other places exist in the country. It's not an exaggeration to say that an island embodying a palm tree, called 'Palm Jumeira' is constructed merely for tourism industry. Each leaves of the tree contain numerous hotels, popular restaurants, and even clubs. There's also the one embodying the World map, with a number of small-sized islands.

Lastly, visiting a desert in UAE would be a memorable and meaningful trip. Unlike the other deserts in the world, the one in the country isn't like a desert. In reality, flourishing and vibrant city of Dubai used to be a barren desert. An establishment of such a high-technology, and sophisticated metropolis could be possible due to an eccentric features of the desert. According to an experiment, sand in the desert is nutritious enough to produce rice.

In conclusion, UAE would be the most preferable country for tourism owing to its large cities, man-made islands, and mysterious deserts. Nowadays, a lot of workers worldwide live a busy life without any leisure time given, in order to gain more money vital for their livelihood. However, I believe that spending some time in traveling to other countries are also important for their mental health and relieving stress.
