3. Essay Writing

A number of means exist for the worldwide parents to educate children. While some family set strict regulations towards their children, others respect their children's thoughts. In reality, it is obvious that these outcomes of home education will constitute the future society. The family background and home education will probably determine a large part of the offsprings' life in society. In my opinion, attention from parents toward their children is the most essential attitude that parents should have.

First and foremost, attention from parents provides power for their children to propel and expand their dream. It is an inclination of young children to get love from parents. In addition, parents are not only an existence for nurturing and protecting their offspring, but also a mental dependence of the children. Thus, children will probably perceive the attention as a support for their dream. For instance, I have seen a young kid who was interested in chemistry. Explaining chemical knowledge from books to their parents was his one of the most favorite hobbies. In spite of the fact that the parents had auditory disabilities, they never lost focus on their child. As a result, he has memorized the entire words of chemistry books, and all types of elements of the periodic table.

Second of all, parents' attention prevents their children from being involved in delinquencies and social vices. By giving attentions, parents get to make more conversations with their children. These chats contain a variety of contents, from daily situations in schools to the thoughts or opinions of the children on certain things. In fact, this enables the parents to gain information regarding the children's current mental state and situations in school, predict the following events or emotions that the children will experience, and make appropriate treatments. For instance, if the parents realized that their children are currently playing with bullies, they are able to predict that the children will soon be involved in school bullying, and decide either to punish their children or encourage them not to be a bully again.

Last of all, it's due to the fact that offsprings usually try to follow and imitate their parents' attitude. This tendency gets stronger when the offsprings are younger, in which the people are more eager to learn something. If parents are apathetic to their children's questions or actions, children will also be devoid of an ability to listen to others carefully, and even behave mischievously to seek for attentions from peers, when becoming older.

In brief, it's necessary for parents to show attention to what their children do, due to their functions of accelerating childrens' dream expansion, preventing them from being toxic, and teaching good attitudes.

4. Speaking

In my opinion, attention from parents toward their children is the most essential attitude that parents should have.

First of all, parents' attention prevents their children from being involved in delinquencies. Through the conversations, parents gain information regarding the children's current mental state. If children seems to be toxic, parents can make proper treatments.

Second of all, children are inclined to imitate attitudes and behaviors of their parents. Thus, if parents usually give attention to their children, it is likely for them to have abilities to listen to others and respect others' right to speak when grown up.
